Greetings Presidents of MCAC institutions-

We hope this note finds you well.

As men's and women's basketball seasons move into February, each game in the MCAC schedule takes on an added importance in terms of post-season play for many of our teams.

With that, it is not uncommon to see intensity levels rise and situations escalate. Please consider taking a moment in the next few days to have a conversation or other communication with your basketball coaching staff and site administrators to remind them of the importance of sportsmanship in the Minnesota College Athletic Conference.

Head coaches carry a unique and important role in contest management; often their actions, statements and body language can set the tone for the rest of the gym. Site managers have an equally important role in the game environment.

It is important that, collectively, we make the remainder of this men's and women's basketball season the best that it can be.

Thank you in advance for your time on this; attached is the MCAC Code of Conduct (Appendix L), which is also available on the MCAC website.

If needed, feel free to send our office a separate communication via email or phone. Our phone number listed in the signature line below is always available.

In sport-
